Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED

03 312 AUG 26 2003

No. ___

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

MAHER TERMINALS, INC.,
Petitioner,

v.

DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF WORKERS' COMPENSATION PROGRAMS, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR and VINCENT RIGGIO, Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

WILLIAM M. BRODERICK *
7 Dey Street, Suite 700
New York, NY 10007
(212) 528-1340

* Counsel of Record

Attorney for Petitioner

August 26, 2003

WILSON-EPES PRINTING CO., INC. – (202) 789-0096 – WASHINGTON, D. C. 20001

QUESTION PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Should employment "status" for Mr. Riggio under the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act be determined based on: (1) "the job he was hired for", as held by the Ninth Circuit, or (2) an examination of an undefined period of his past work history, unrelated to "the job he was hired for", as held by the Third Circuit?

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Maher Terminals, Inc. is a privately held corporation. There is no parent or publicly held company owning any of its stock.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTION PRESENTED FOR REVIEW	i
CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT	ii
TABLE OF CITED AUTHORITIES	v
CITATIONS TO OPINIONS AND ORDER BELOW	1
STATEMENT OF THIS COURT'S JURISDICTION	2
STATUTE INVOLVED	2
STATEMENT OF THE CASE	4
Legal Issue:	4
General Background:	4
Facts of the Case:	5
Procedural History:	6
ARGUMENT	8
POINT I
Intervention is necessary to resolve a conflict in the Circuits over the LHWCA test for "status", in particular whether the test should include a review of an undefined period of work history, or a review of the job duties for the current employment	8
POINT II
The Third Circuit Decision based upon an examination of prior work history is inconsistent with and ignores this Court's holding in Harbor Tug	11
POINT III
The approach taken by the Third Circuit is not consistent with the prior holdings of this Court	13

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

POINT IV Page

The Third Circuit Decision is inconsistent with the legislative intent of the 1984 amendments to limit coverage under the LHWCA 16

CONCLUSION 18

APPENDICES

APPENDIX A

Opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit dated May 29, 2003 ..... 1a

APPENDIX B

Decision and Order of the Benefits Review Board issued June 28, 2001 ..... 14a

APPENDIX C

Decision and Order on Remand of Administrative Law Judge Ralph A. Romano issued June 19, 2000 ..... 33a

APPENDIX D

Decision and Order of the Benefits Review Board issued May 27, 1997 ..... 37a

APPENDIX E

Decision and Order of Administrative Law Judge Ainsworth Brown issued May 20, 1996 ..... 45a

TABLE OF CITED AUTHORITIES

CASES

	Page
Caldwell v. Universal Maritime Service Corp., 22 BRBS 398 (1989)	6
Chandris, Inc. v. Latsis, 515 U.S. 347 (1995)	11
Harbor Tug and Barge Co. v. Papai, 520 U.S. 548 (1997)	8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13
Maher Terminals, Inc. v. Director, OWCP and Vincent Riggio, 330 F.3d 162 (3rd Cir. 2003)	1
Maher Terminals, Inc. v. Farrell, 548 F.2d 476 (3rd Cir. 1977)	10
McGray Construction Co. v. Director, 112 F.3d 1025 (9th Cir. 1997), withdrawn, 124 F.3d 1310 (9th Cir. 1997)	9
McGray Construction Co. v. Director, 124 F.3d 1310 (9th Cir. 1997)	9
McGray Construction Company v. Director, OWCP, 181 F.3d 1008 (9th Cir. 1999)	9, 10, 12, 13
Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249 (1977)	7, 14, 15
Papai v. Harbor Tug And Barge Co., 67 F.3d 203 (9th Cir. 1995), rev'd 520 U.S. 548 (1997)	8
Riggio v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 31 BRBS 58 (1997)	2
Riggio v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 35 BRBS 104 (2001)	2
Sette v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 27 BRBS 223 (1993)	10

STATUTES

28 U.S.C. § 1254(1)	2
Longshore And Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. § 901 et seq.	passim
LHWCA § 2(3), 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)	3, 6, 8, 12, 16

TABLE OF CITED AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
LHWCA § 3(a), 33 U.S.C. § 903(a)	2
LHWCA § 21, 33 U.S.C. § 921	7
46 U.S.C. § 688	11, 12
OTHER AUTHORITIES
1984 U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News, 98th Congress, Legislative History	5, 16, 17
Pub. L. 98-426 § 2(a)	14, 16
U.S. Constitution Article 1, section 7	4
U.S. Constitution Article 3, section 2	4
Waterfront Commission of New York Harbor Rules and Regulations, 21 NYCRR 1.1 et. seq..	5

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

No. ___

MAHER TERMINALS, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF WORKERS' COMPENSATION PROGRAMS, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR and VINCENT RIGGIO, Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

---

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

CITATIONS TO OPINIONS AND ORDER BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit (Appendix page 1a "App. 1a") is cited at Maher Terminals, Inc. v. Director, OWCP and Vincent Riggio, 330 F.3d 162 (3rd Cir. 2003).

The Decision and Order of Administrative Law Judge Ainsworth Brown (App.45a) denying Mr. Riggio's claim for benefits under the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. § 901 et seq. (hereinafter "LHWCA") is unreported. The Decision and Order of the Benefits Review Board (App.37a) vacating the denial of benefits and remanding is cited at Riggio v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 31 BRBS 58 (1997). The Decision and Order on Remand of Administrative Law Judge Ralph A. Romano (App.33a) denying Mr. Riggio's claim for benefits under the LHWCA is unreported. The Decision and Order of the Benefits Review Board (App.14a) reversing the denial of benefits is reported at Riggio v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 35 BRBS 104 (2001).

STATEMENT OF THIS COURT'S JURISDICTION

Petitioner seeks review of a judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit entered on May 29, 2003. This Court has jurisdiction to review the judgment of the Court of Appeals pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTE INVOLVED

Section 903(a) of the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. § 901 et. seq. provides:

> (a) Disability or death; injuries occurring upon navigable waters of United States
>
> Except as otherwise provided in this section, compensation shall be payable under this Act in respect of disability or death of an employee, but only if the disability or death results from an injury occurring upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any adjoining pier, wharf, dry dock, terminal, building way, marine railway, or other adjoining area customarily used by an employer in loading, unloading, repairing, dismantling, or building a vessel).

33 U.S.C. § 903(a).

Section 902(3) provides:

> (3) The term "employee" means any person engaged in maritime employment, including any longshoreman or other person engaged in longshoring operations, and any harbor-worker including a ship repairman, shipbuilder, and ship-breaker, but such term does not include—
>
> (A) individuals employed exclusively to perform office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work;
>
> (B) individuals employed by a club, camp, recreational operation, restaurant, museum, or retail outlet;
>
> (C) individuals employed by a marina and who are not engaged in construction, replacement, or expansion of such marina (except for routine maintenance);
>
> (D) individuals who (i) are employed by suppliers, transporters, or vendors, (ii) are temporarily doing business on the premises of an employer described in paragraph (4), and (iii) are not engaged in work normally performed by employees of that employer under this chapter;
>
> (E) aquaculture workers;
>
> (F) individuals employed to build, repair, or dismantle any recreational vessel under sixty-five feet in length;
>
> (G) a master or member of a crew of any vessel, or
>
> (H) any person engaged by a master to load or unload or repair any small vessel under eighteen tons net;
>
> if individuals described in clauses (A) through (F) are subject to coverage under a State workers' compensation law.

33 U.S.C. § 902(3).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Legal Issue:

Mr. Riggio sustained an injury while at work for Maher Terminals, Inc. ("Maher") a marine terminal operator in Port Elizabeth, New Jersey, on property leased from the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey adjoining Newark Bay. Mr. Riggio has been compensated for his injury through state workers compensation. The federal question being submitted to this Court is whether Mr. Riggio should have received compensation under the applicable state workers compensation program or under the federal workers compensation program established under the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act (LHWCA). The LHWCA was enacted by Congress pursuant to the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the federal government (U.S. Constitution Article 3, section 2) and the necessary and proper clause (Article 1, section 7).

The answer to this question turns on whether Mr. Riggio at the time of his injury met the employment "status" test set out in the LHWCA. There is now a split in the Circuits on how to resolve this question.[1]

General Background:

Mr. Riggio was a "casual" day laborer provided to Maher through the union hiring hall. Each day, Maher orders labor from a local union hiring hall. This day labor includes, among others: (1) delivery clerks and receiving clerks

---

[1] This question is more than an abstract legal question because the Federal LHWCA is significantly more expensive than most state workers compensation programs. The statutory provisions at issue in this case were adopted by Congress as part of an effort to control the cost of the Federal LHWCA program by excluding some workers from coverage. See infra at Point IV.

("clerks [2] ") and (2) checkers [3]. Which employees work as clerks or checkers and the number of employees who work as clerks or checkers changes almost daily based on factors such as the needs of the employer, employee schedules, and seniority rules. The employment of these clerks and checkers is governed by the Waterfront Commission of New York Harbor Rules and Regulations [4] and the Collective Bargaining Agreement between the New York Shipping Association, Inc. (NYSA) [5] and the International Longshoremen's Association ("ILA").

Facts of the Case:

Mr. Riggio was a member of Local 1 of the ILA (the clerks and checkers local) and was on Maher's permanent hire list, but was not on a specific job list (App.3a). The significance of these facts is that if Mr. Riggio was hired by Maher on a given day, he could be hired as a clerk or he could be hired as a checker (App.3a). Mr. Riggio also could be hired by other employers covered by the collective bargaining agreement and, in fact, had worked for other employers on the waterfront when there was no work at Maher (App.17a).

When hired as a clerk, Riggio worked exclusively in an office doing clerical work (App.3a), a job clearly excluded from coverage under the LHWCA since the definition of [2] Delivery and receiving clerks work in an office on the terminal entering data into a computer.

---

[3] Checkers oversee the movement of cargo on and off vessels and within the terminal. Their duties require them to be in the areas where cargo is handled and consequently to be exposed to maritime hazards. 1984 U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News, 98th Congress, Legislative History, p.2736-2737.

[4] 21 NYCRR 1.1 et. seq.

[5] NYSA is a multi-employer bargaining unit that represents Maher and other employers in collective bargaining.

"employee" under the Act specifically excludes "individuals employed exclusively to perform office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work." 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A). When hired as a checker, Mr. Riggio's work on the waterfront included checking cargo entering and leaving the terminal either by truck or ship (App.3a). It is equally clear that the responsibilities of a checker fall within the status test outlined in the LHWCA since Congress intended to include workers in areas where cargo is handled. Infra at Point IV. When hired in either position, Mr. Riggio was not subject to reassignment to the other position for the day of his hire (App.2a).

On February 3, 1994, Mr. Riggio, was hired by Maher as a clerk to enter data into a computer in a Maher office. While working that day as a clerk, Mr. Riggio sustained an injury when he fell off a chair in the delivery office at the terminal (App.2a). Maher voluntarily paid claimant compensation under the State of New Jersey workers compensation statute. Subsequently claimant filed this claim for benefits under the LHWCA (App.46a).

Procedural History:

The matter was tried before Administrative Law Judge Ainsworth Brown who found that claimant's job fell within the office clerical exclusion to coverage under Section 902(3)(A) and denied the claim (App.47a).

Claimant appealed to the Benefits Review Board. The Board vacated Judge Brown's decision and remanded the case holding that Judge Brown should have applied the standard set forth in the Board's decision in Caldwell v. Universal Maritime Service Corp., 22 BRBS 398 (1989) since claimant occasionally worked as a checker prior to his employment as a delivery clerk (App.42a).

On remand, the matter was reassigned to Administrative Law Judge Ralph A. Romano. In denying the claim, Judge

Romano found that Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249 (1977) does not confer "status" on an office worker who occasionally worked as a checker in the past since he was not subject to reassignment during the same day that he worked as an office clerk (App.35a-36a).

Claimant again appealed to the Benefits Review Board. The Board reversed the decision of Judge Romano and found the claimant satisfied the "status" requirement for coverage under the LHWCA by working in the past as a checker, while ignoring the fact that the job for which claimant was hired on the day of his injury was exclusively clerical, i.e., a clerk, and that he was not subject to reassignment for the term of his hire and had no job duties which would have required him to be exposed to maritime hazards (App.31a).

The Employer petitioned the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit pursuant to 33 U.S.C. § 921(c). The Third Circuit, applying an employment history test, found that since claimant had been hired by Maher in the past as a checker and had worked fifty (50) percent of the year for Maher as a checker (an indisputably covered job), he satisfied the "status" test for coverage even when he was hired exclusively as a clerk (an indisputably excluded job) (App.13a).

Maher has filed this Petition for a Writ of Certiorari within 90 days of the entry of the judgment by the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit on May 29, 2003.

ARGUMENT

POINT I

Intervention is necessary to resolve a conflict in the Circuits over the LHWCA test for "status", in particular whether the test should include a review of an undefined period of work history, or a review of the job duties for the current employment.

To be eligible for compensation under the LHWCA, an employee must independently satisfy both an employment "situs" and employment "status" test. "Situs" is not in dispute. "Status" is met when the worker is engaged in maritime employment. 33 U.S.C. § 902(3).

It is beyond dispute that the job for which Mr. Riggio was hired on the day of his injury does not meet the status test set forth within the LHWCA since it was exclusively office clerical. 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A). The definition of "employee" under the LHWCA specifically excludes "individuals employed exclusively to perform office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work." 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A). Stated another way, if Mr. Riggio had spent his entire career working as a clerk, there would be no question in any Circuit that he did not satisfy the status requirement of the LHWCA.

In the Ninth Circuit, the fact that the job for which Mr. Riggio was hired did not meet the status requirement of the LHWCA would be the end of the inquiry. The basis of the Ninth Circuit's holding was this Court's decision in Harbor Tug and Barge Co. v. Papai, 520 U.S. 548 (1997). In fact, the Ninth Circuit had reached a similar conclusion to that now taken by the Third Circuit. Relying on its decision in Papai v. Harbor Tug and Barge Co., 67 F.3d 203 (9th Cir. 1995), rev'd 520 U.S. 548 (1997), the Ninth Circuit ruled that an individual could establish "maritime employment" by overall employment history and being hired out of a union hiring hall even if the job for which he was hired was clearly non-maritime. McGray Construction Co. v. Director, 112 F.3d 1025 (9th Cir. 1997), withdrawn, 124 F.3d 1310 (9th Cir. 1997). After this Court reversed the case upon which it had relied, the Ninth Circuit granted rehearing and withdrew its prior opinion. McGray Construction Co. v. Director, 124 F.3d 1310 (9th Cir. 1997).

The Ninth Circuit recognized that applying an employment history test to the "status" inquiry was "untenable" in light of Harbor Tug. Rather, the Court looked at the essential duties of the job for which the employee was hired when he was injured. The Court held:

> [W]orking out of a union hall from which employers regularly hire maritime workers, and a history of maritime employment, do not make one a maritime employee when an employer hires the individual for a non-maritime job. The statutory term 'person engaged in maritime employment' means 'engaged' on this job.

McGray Construction Company v. Director, OWCP, 181 F.3d 1008, 1014 (9th Cir. 1999).

The Ninth Circuit further noted:

> The concern with "walking in and out of coverage" is not a metaphor suggesting that once a person is a maritime worker for long enough, he remains one, even on a non-maritime job for a non-maritime employer.

181 F. 3d at 1015.

The Ninth Circuit, in rejecting an overall employment history test for coverage, expressed concern for uniformity of coverage. The Court noted:

> Suppose a load falls on two construction workers hired to do exactly the same non-maritime job together, and one of them has in other employments done maritime work. Were we to accept the Director's argument, the worker with the maritime history would get benefits under the federal Longshore and Harbor Workers' Com> pensation Act, and his coworker under the state Workers' Compensation act. It is a plain injustice for two men to be treated differently when exactly the same mishap injures both of them simultaneously in the same job, because one of them has a history of a different kind of employment.

181 F. 3d at 1016.

In this case, Mr. Riggio was hired for a non-maritime job (a clerk) when he was injured. It is quite clear that had the injury occurred within the Ninth Circuit, claimant would have been excluded from coverage based upon an analysis of the duties of the job for which he was hired at the time of injury. In contrast, the Third Circuit has found claimant covered under the LHWCA based upon an examination of an undefined period of prior work history irrespective of the duties of the job for which he was hired on the day of his injury.

The application of the Ninth Circuit's approach to this case is straightforward. The job for which Mr. Riggio was hired does not meet the status requirement of the LHWCA, therefore, Mr. Riggio is not eligible for benefits under the LHWCA.

The Third Circuit decided to take an alternative approach and reject the approach taken by the Ninth Circuit in McGray Construction and this Court in Harbor Tug. The Third Circuit recognized that the job Mr. Riggio was hired for did not meet the status test of the LHWCA[6], but then conducted

---

[6] The Court stated:

> The law is clear that delivery clerks, performing the function that Riggio was on the day of his injury, are not covered under the Act. Maher Terminals, Inc. v. Farrell, 548 F.2d 476 (3rd Cir. 1977); see also Sette v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 27 BRBS 223 (1993) (denying coverage for a delivery clerk).

(App.9a)

an inquiry into whether other jobs for which Mr. Riggio had been hired in the past met the status test of the LWHCA.

As noted above, Mr. Riggio had been hired in the past for other jobs that met the status requirement of the LHWCA. Therefore, the Third Circuit concluded that Mr. Riggio could use past employment, unrelated to the job for which he was hired, to meet the status test of the LHWCA (App.13a).

The approaches taken by the Third and Ninth Circuits are in direct conflict. This Court should resolve this conflict.

POINT II

The Third Circuit Decision based upon an examination of prior work history is inconsistent with and ignores this Court's holding in Harbor Tug.

This Court should grant certiorari in this case because the Third Circuit's decision is inconsistent with Harbor Tug and Barge Co. v. Papai, 520 U.S. 558 (1997). In Harbor Tug, this Court was called on to address the question of whether employment history with a particular employer is relevant to the seaman status inquiry under the Jones Act, 46 U.S.C. § 688. The Court granted certiorari in order to clarify its decision in Chandris, Inc. v. Latsis, 515 U.S. 347 (1995) which had been subject to differing interpretations by the Circuits. Harbor Tug, 520 U.S. at 550-51.

In Harbor Tug, this Court rejected the overall employment history in connection with the determination of Jones Act seaman's status. The Court stated ". . . the employee's prior work history with a particular employer may not affect the seaman inquiry if the employee was injured on a new assignment with the same employer, an assignment with different 'essential duties' from his previous ones". Harbor Tug, 520 U.S. at 556. The Court was concerned with predictability of coverage "before a particular work day begins". Id at 558.

The Court stated:

> Considering prior employments with independent employers in making the seaman-status inquiry would undermine "the interests of employers and maritime workers alike in being able to predict who will be covered by the Jones Act (and perhaps more importantly for purposes of the employers' workers' compensation obligations, who will be covered by the LHWCA) before a particular work day begins." (Emphasis added. Citations omitted.)

While we recognize that Harbor Tug is a Jones Act case, it is clear that the Supreme Court considered the text and purpose of the LHWCA in determining seaman status under the Jones Act. Since the two statutes are mutually exclusive, it would create confusion with regard to coverage were two different tests to apply[7]. For example, under an overall employment history test, a long-time longshoreman injured while temporarily serving as a seaman would be covered under the LHWCA even though masters and members of the crew (seamen) are specifically excluded from coverage. 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(G). The Ninth Circuit understood Harbor Tug to apply equally to the determination of employment status under the LHWCA. McGray Construction Company v. Director, OWCP, 181 F.3d 1008 (9th Cir. 1999). In our brief and at the oral argument, we urged the Third Circuit to do likewise. However, the Third Circuit held that claimant's overall employment history should be considered in determining coverage. The Court requested that the employer stipulate that for some unspecified period prior to his accident, claimant worked 50% of the year as a checker and 50% of the year as a clerk (App.3a). Based upon this Court's holding in Harbor Tug and the Ninth Circuit's holding in McGray Construction, the employer agreed. The Third Circuit completely ignored the Harbor Tug case and attempted, albeit weakly, to distinguish McGray Construction on the basis that the claimant in that case was working for a different employer who would not have known his work history (App.13a). This was a misrepresentation of the holding in McGray Construction. The Ninth Circuit was concerned with uniformity of coverage. The fact that the claimant in that case was hired by a different employer was incidental to the holding. Under the Third Circuit's reasoning, if Mr. Riggio had worked in the past for another stevedore as a checker and then was hired by Maher as a clerk, he would not be covered. However, since he worked for Maher in the past as a checker, he is covered when he works as a clerk. This is the very "injustice" that the Ninth Circuit sought to avoid. McGray Construction, 181 F.3d at 1016.

---

[7] Both statutes derive from the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the U.S. government and have their origins in the ancient principles of maintenance and cure.

Since the Third Circuit's decision conflicts with this Court's holding in Harbor Tug, this Court should intervene to resolve the issue of whether employment history is a relevant factor in the employment status inquiry under the LHWCA.

POINT III

The approach taken by the Third Circuit is not consistent with the prior holdings of this Court.

In holding that Mr. Riggio satisfied the "status" requirement for coverage under the LHWCA, the Third Circuit stated that since he "spent half of his time as a checker, an indisputably longshoring job, he is covered under the LHWCA even though he worked as a clerk on the day of his injury" (App.13a). In reaching this conclusion, the Third Circuit looked at an unspecified period of overall employment history with this employer without regard to the regular duties of the job for which claimant was hired on the day of his accident. The Third Circuit relied on this Court's opinion in Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249 (1977), a decision rendered before the 1984 amendments that added the "employed exclusively to perform office clerical" language in dispute in this case. Pub. L. 98-426 § 2(a). Specifically, the Third Circuit seized on this Court's statement that in order to satisfy the "status" requirement, workers must spend "at least some of their time in indisputably longshoring operations". Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273 (App.8a).

Unlike Mr. Riggio for the term of his employment as a clerk, both claimants in the Caputo case, as part of their regularly assigned duties, could have been, and had been assigned work that was indisputably covered. Claimant Blundo in the Caputo case, was a checker when he was injured. As the Court noted:

> Blundo was assigned his tasks at the beginning of each day and until he arrived at the terminal he did not know whether he would be working on a ship or on shore. He was reassigned during the day if he completed the task to which he was assigned initially.

Caputo, 432 U.S. at 253. Given these facts, Blundo clearly walked in and out of coverage during the term of his employment as a checker. He, therefore, was covered even though he arguably was not involved in the loading or unloading of a vessel at the moment of injury.

With respect to claimant Caputo, the Court noted:

> On the day of his injury [Caputo] was hired by petitioner [N]ortheast as a terminal laborer. In that capacity, he could have been assigned to any one of a number of tasks necessary to the transfer of cargo between land and maritime transportation, including stuffing and stripping containers, loading and discharging lighters and barges, and loading and unloading trucks. Not only did he have no idea when he set out in the morning which of these tasks he might be assigned, but in fact his assignment > could have changed during the day. Thus, had Caputo avoided injury and completed loading the consignee's truck on the day of the accident, he then could have been assigned to unload a lighter. [Footnote and citations to the record omitted.]

Caputo at 273-74. Thus, during the term of his employment, Caputo could have been, and had been, assigned to both covered and non-covered duties. The Court concluded that he was covered for the entire term.

On the other hand, Mr. Riggio, when he was hired for the job of clerk, worked exclusively in an office doing clerical work. At no time was he ordered to work in dual job assignments during the same employment. If he was hired as a clerk, he worked exclusively as a clerk. If he was hired as a checker, he worked exclusively as a checker for the term of that employment. He never walked in and out of coverage during each employment.

The approach taken by the Third Circuit—examining an undefined period of prior work history to determine coverage rather than limiting the inquiry to the job for which he was hired—leads to total uncertainty as to who is and who is not covered under the LWHCA. The Third Circuit approach would require unending litigation to determine what prior history is included and excluded, for how long a time period, and under what circumstances. Without a clarifying amendment from Congress, the Courts can anticipate a decade of litigation over this issue.

Because the holding of the Third Circuit is inconsistent with a prior holding of this Court, this Court should grant certiorari to enforce its prior holding.

POINT IV

The Third Circuit Decision is inconsistent with the legislative intent of the 1984 amendments to limit coverage under the LHWCA.

In 1984, Congress amended the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. 33 U.S.C. § 901 et seq. Particularly, Congress amended the definition of employee in Section 902(3) by adding subparagraphs (A) through (F). Pub. L. 98-426 § 2(a). Clearly, the 1984 amendments were intended to restrict coverage. The Legislative History accompanying the amendments so states as follows:

> S.38 . . . is intended to reduce the cost of Longshore coverage for employers in the covered industries in a manner which will disturb, to the most limited extent possible, the rights and benefits which the Longshore Act provides.

1984 U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News, 98th Congress, Legislative History, p.2736.

Further, Hon. Austin J. Murphy in a statement accompanying the amendments stated:

> I wish to commend Congressman Miller, . . ., for the job which he has done in both this Congress and in the 97th Congress in attempting to revise the provisions of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. Such revision is necessary because of the hardship it has placed upon many of this nation's basic industries, and because of the inclusion in the 1972 amendments of many workers who did not truly meet the intent of the original Act. (emphasis added)

Id. p.2764

The following excerpt is also relevant to a clear understanding of the legislative intent:

> The definition of the term "employee" is modified to exclude from the term "employee", and thus from the coverage of the Longshore Act, certain categories of workers who are not engaged in maritime occupations or who are not exposed to maritime hazards even though they may be employed by maritime employers . . . (emphasis added)

Id. at p.2736. It is submitted that falling off a chair in the delivery office is not a "maritime hazard".

> Not all clerical work is intended to be excluded - merely that which is performed exclusively in a business office of the employing enterprise. Workers who may be classified as clerks or cargo checkers for example may be deemed to be engaged, at times, in "clerical" type work, but that work is done in the areas in which cargo is handled, not exclusively in a business office of the stevedore. In such circumstances, the checker or clerk would remain within Longshore Act jurisdiction. (emphasis added)

Id. at p.2737.

The job held by Mr. Riggio as a clerk was exclusively clerical. He spent all of his time during the workday in an office. None of his work was performed in the areas where cargo was handled. It is crystal clear that Congress did not intend to extend coverage to employees like Mr. Riggio who fell off his chair while pushing away from his desk in the delivery office. The Third Circuit's holding that Mr. Riggio is covered for this "hazard" is contrary to Congress's intent to limit coverage to those workers who are exposed to maritime hazards. In this seniority-based industry, the higher paying clerk jobs go to the most senior employees. It follows that all clerks would have worked as checkers in the past. Therefore, the Third Circuit's past employment test for evaluating maritime status has the practical effect of writing "status" out of the statute. The Third Circuit's decision so far departs from Congress's intent to restrict coverage under the LHWCA that this Court should exercise its supervisory power to remedy this error.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that this petition should be granted to resolve a conflict among the Circuits over the appropriate test for employment status under the Longshore & Harbor Workers' Compensation Act and to remedy an erroneous Third Circuit decision that conflicts with prior decisions of this Court and legislative intent.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM M. BRODERICK *
7 Dey Street, Suite 700
New York, NY 10007
(212) 528-1340

* Counsel of Record

Attorney for Petitioner

August 26, 2003

APPENDICES

APPENDIX A

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

[Filed May 29, 2003]

No. 01-3343

MAHER TERMINALS, INC.,
Petitioner,

v.

DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF WORKERS' COMPENSATION PROGRAMS; VINCENT RIGGIO, Respondents.

On Petition for Review Pursuant to 33 U.S.C. § 921(c) of the Decision and Order of the United States Department of Labor, Benefits Review Board, Entered June 28, 2001(BRB Nos. 96-1136 and 00-960)

Argued February 24, 2003

Before: BECKER, Chief Judge,* SCIRICA, *Circuit Judge and SHADUR, District Judge.

OPINION OF THE COURT

BECKER, Circuit Judge.

The sole question in this petition for review of the order of the United States Department of Labor, Benefits Review

---

* Judge Becker completed his term as Chief Judge on May 4, 2003.

 Judge Scirica succeeded to the position of Chief Judge on May 4,2003.

 Honorable Milton I. Shadur, United States District Judge for the Northern District of Illinois, sitting by designation.

Board (the "Board") to whether the claimant, Vincent Riggio, is a covered maritime employee under the Longshore and Harbor Workers Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. § 901 et seq.(the "Act"). Riggio was employed by petitioner Maher Terminals, Inc. ("Maher") as both checker, a covered position, and delivery clerk, a job that is not covered by the Act.[1] Although Maher stipulated at oral argument that Riggio split his time evenly between these jobs, the company argues that Riggio is not covered by the Act because on the day of his injury he was working as a delivery clerk and was not subject to reassignment. In response, Riggio asks us to follow the reasoning of the Board and find him covered because although he was not working in a covered position on the day of his injury, he regularly engaged in covered maritime employment. Thus, Riggio submits, his job at Maher required him to spend "at least some of [his] time in indisputably longshoring operations," the test for coverage articulated by the Supreme Court in Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo,432 U.S. 249, 273 (1977).

We agree with Riggio's interpretation of the Act and will not adopt Maher's narrow interpretation of the Act's coverage analysis that would include only the day on which the claimant was injured. Instead, we believe that we must look at the claimant's regular duties to determine whether he is engaged on a regular basis in maritime employment. We will therefore deny Maher's petition for review.

I.

The facts are not disputed. On February 3, 1994, Riggio injured his left arm when he fell off a chair while working in the office of Berth 62 of Maher's port facilities in Elizabeth,

---

[1] Delivery clerks are not covered by the Act because they perform clerical work in an office; in contrast, checkers are covered because they are involved in the loading and unloading process, traditional longshoring work that generally involves activities on the docks.

New Jersey. Although he was employed as a delivery clerk on the day of his injury, Riggio split his time evenly between work as a checker and as a delivery clerk for Maher.[2] He was a member of the local checker's union and remained on Maher's permanent hire list, but not on a specified job list, so that the dock boss could assign him to a different job each day. When Riggio worked as a checker, he was required to be in the shipping lanes, but when employed as a delivery clerk, Riggio worked exclusively in the office entering data into a computer. In both jobs, his function was to handle paperwork for the in-coming and out-going cargo.

This case has a lengthy administrative history. Because the facts are not in dispute the sole issue in the administrative proceedings was the legal question whether Riggio's claim is covered under the Longshore & Harbor Workers Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. § 901 et seq. The first administrative law judge ("ALJ") to hear the case, Judge Ainsworth Brown, denied coverage because he found that Riggio's job as a delivery clerk was excluded from coverage because it was a clerical position under 33 U.S.C.§ 902(3)(A) (stating that "individuals employed exclusively to perform office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work" shall not be considered maritime employees covered by the Act). Judge Brown determined that even though Riggio also worked as a checker, this was insufficient to satisfy his burden of proving coverage under this court's decision in Maher Terminals, Inc.

---

[2] The parties originally disagreed as to what percentage of his time Riggio worked as a checker or a delivery clerk. In the first hearing before the administrative law judge, Riggio testified that he split his time evenly between these positions. Maher disputed this assertion by presenting evidence that Riggio had worked solely as a delivery clerk in the two weeks before the injury. Maher conceded on remand before the administrative law judge that Riggio worked occasionally as a checker and was subject to assignment to this position. However, at oral argument before this court, Maher stipulated to the fact that Riggio worked 50% of his time as a checker and the other 50% as a delivery clerk.

v. Farrell, 548F.2d 476 (3d Cir. 1977) (holding that a delivery clerk is not covered under the Act).

On appeal, the Benefits Review Board vacated Judge Brown's denial of benefits. It noted that because Riggio also worked as a checker, he could not have been "exclusively" employed as a delivery clerk within the meaning of 33U.S.C. § 902(3)(A). The Board remanded the case to the Office of Administrative Law Judges for further proceedings. Before the case was heard again, Maher petitioned this court for review of the Board's order, but we dismissed the petition for lack of jurisdiction. The parties also agreed on a stipulation resolving the medical and compensation issues subject to the final resolution of the coverage issue.

On remand, the case was assigned to a different ALJ, Judge Ralph A. Romano, whom the parties informed about their stipulation, although they did not ask him to enter the stipulation into the record at that time. Judge Romano held4that a delivery clerk could be covered by the Act only if he were subject to reassignment as a checker during the course of a single workday. Since Riggio worked only as a delivery clerk on the day of his injury and did not demonstrate that he was subject to reassignment during that day, Judge Romano denied him coverage. Riggio appealed again to the Board, which rejected Judge Romano's "same day of injury" status test. Instead, the Board found Riggio to be covered because "he was assigned to work as a checker by [Maher] as a part of his regular duties," even though he did not work as a checker on the day of his injury or even in the two weeks previous. Accordingly, the Board reversed Judge Romano's order and remanded the case "for consideration of any remaining issues."

Within the mandated 60 day period to appeal, see 33U.S.C. § 921(c), Maher filed a petition in this court for review of the Board's decision. Riggio subsequently filed a motion to hold briefing in abeyance pending the finalization of the stipulation referred to above regarding the amount recoverable upon resolution of the coverage issue. The final version of the stipulation read in relevant part:

> There is dispute [sic] between claimant and employer as to the existence of jurisdiction under the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. The employer does not concede the existence of such jurisdiction by reason of the execution of this stipulation. The parties agree, in the event of a finding of jurisdiction under the Act, that the injury has caused a permanent loss of use to the left upper extremity and that the claimant is entitle [sic] to an award of 4% of the left arm, equaling12.48 weeks, at a weekly rate of $738.30 pursuant to33 U.S.C. 908(c)(1).
>
> . . .
>
> Additionally, in the event that the third Circuit [sic]finds jurisdiction under the [Act], and an award of 4% of the left arm is awarded, a fee of $7,500.00 should be paid to the firm of Israel, Adler, Ronca & Gucciardo up and above compensation paid to the claimant.

Judge Romano issued an order approving the stipulation, but he characterized the stipulation as a settlement. Recognizing that Judge Romano's order of settlement was not what the parties wanted, Maher petitioned Judge Romano to amend the order to reflect that the agreement is a stipulation and not a settlement. In a subsequent order, Judge Romano complied with this request.

We have appellate jurisdiction to review the Board's order under 33 U.S.C. § 921(c).[3] Our examination is "limited to a

---

[3] The Director, Office of Workers' Compensation Programs, a respondent in this case, filed a motion to dismiss Maher's petition for review, claiming that this court lacks jurisdiction to hear this appeal because the Board's decision was not a "final order" within the meaning of 33U.S.C. § 921(c). We will deny this motion because although the Board remanded the case to the ALJ for further consideration, there was nothing more for determination of whether the Board acted in conformance with applicable law and within its proper scope of review." Curtis v. Schlumberger Offshore Services., Inc., 849 F.2d805, 807 (3d Cir. 1988). Because the Board does not administer the Act, our review of its interpretation of the Act is "essentially plenary" but we "will 'respect' [the Board's] interpretation if it is 'reasonable.' " Sea-Land Serv., Inc. v. Rock, 953 F.2d 56, 59 (3d Cir. 1992) (quoting Curtis,849 F.2d at 808).

II. Coverage

A. Description of the Coverage Test

The 1972 amendments to the Longshore and Harbor Workers Compensation Act created a "two-part test 'looking both to the "sit us" of the injury and the "status" of the injured,' to determine eligibility for compensation." Rock, 953 F.2d at 60 (quoting Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249, 265 (1977)). Because Congress included a broad geographical area in the "situs" component of the test, including both injuries on water and areas on land that are connected to maritime activity, it limited the persons who fulfill the "status" test to those who "engaged in maritime employment." 33 U.S.C. § 902(3). The Act defines such persons as:

> any longshoreman or other person engaged in longshoring operations, and any harbor-worker including a ship repairman, shipbuilder, and shipbreaker, but such term does not include—the ALJ to decide in light of the parties' stipulation resolving all issues except for the legal question of coverage. Because the Board's order was "for all purposes final by the time this court was called upon to consider the petition," we have jurisdiction under the Act. Sea-Land Serv., Inc. v. Director, OWCP, 540 F.2d 629, 631 n.1 (3d Cir.1976).

---

> (A) individuals employed exclusively to perform office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work;

Id. We noted in Rock that this definition of "maritime employment" is rather imprecise, but that Congress "came closest to defining this key term in the 'typical example' of the expanded coverage set forth in the legislative history."953 F.2d at 60. The legislative history explains:

> The intent of the Committee is to permit a uniform compensation system to apply to employees who would otherwise be covered for part of their activity. To take a typical example, cargo, whether in break bulk or containerized form, is typically unloaded from the ship and immediately transported to a storage or holding area on the pier, wharf, or terminal adjoining navigable waters. The employees who perform this work would be covered under the bill for injuries sustained by them over the navigable waters or on the adjoining land area. . . . [E]mployees whose responsibility is only to pick up stored cargo for further transshipment would not be covered, nor would purely clerical employees whose jobs do not require them to participate in the loading or unloading of cargo. However, checkers, for example, who are directly involved in the loading or unloading functions are covered by the new amendment.

H.R. Rep. No. 92-1441, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. 10-11 (1972), reprinted in 1972 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4698, 4708.

In its decision in Caputo, supra, the Supreme Court read the "typical example" in the legislative history quoted above as indicating Congress's intent "to cover those workers involved in the essential elements of unloading a vessel—taking cargo out of the hold, moving it away from the ship's side, and carrying it immediately to a storage or holding area." 432 U.S. at 267. In contrast, "the example also makes it clear that persons who are on the situs but are not engaged in the overall process of loading and unloading vessels are not covered." Caputo, 432 U.S. at 267; see also Chesapeake and O.R. Co. v. Schwalb, 493 U.S. 40, 46 (1989) (stating that the coverage test for "land-based work other than longshoring and the other occupations named in § 902(3) is an occupational test focusing on loading and unloading").

Importantly, the Caputo Court specifically rejected the "moment of injury" principle, in which the coverage analysis depended on the task that the employee was engaged in at the time of the injury. Rather, the Court held that "when Congress said it wanted to cover 'longshoremen,' it had in mind persons whose employment is such that they spend at least some of their time in indisputably longshoring operations and who, without the 1972 amendments, would be covered for only part of their activity." 432 U.S. at 273.The Court emphasized this point again in P.C. Pfeiffer Co. v. Ford, 444 U.S. 69, 81 (1979), when it stated that "[a]worker responsible for some portion of that (longshoring) activity is as much an integral part of the process of loading or unloading a ship as a person who participates in the entire process." In Rock, supra, we explained the Court's interpretation of the Act as seeking "to avoid 'shifting coverage' . . . by extending coverage to an employee who throughout the day might have been assigned to unload a vessel but at the hour of the accident had been temporarily assigned a task that might not have been covered under the Act." 953 F.2d at 63.

Although the Supreme Court's decisions indicate a rather liberal analysis of the extent of coverage, we held in Rock that there is a limit to those covered by the Act. In that case, the claimant had been employed for several years as a longshoreman, but eventually decided to work solely as a courtesy van driver, a choice he was entitled to by virtue of his seniority. The claimant worked solely in this function for two years before the date of his injury, which occurred during the course of his job as a driver. We determined that this type of employment was not covered under the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Act because a courtesy van driver is not "an essential element or ingredient of the loading or unloading process." 953 F.2d at 67. Although we noted that the claimant was officially subject to reassignment as a longshoreman, we declined to grant him coverage for that reason alone because we did not think that the "shifting coverage" aspect of Caputo applied. We explained:

> The [Caputo] holding cannot be stretched to cover Rock, who voluntarily chose a position that would no longer involve him in the dangers of loading and unloading, and whose only occupation in the two years in which he held his new job was to drive the courtesy van. [Caputo] protects those employees who walk in and out of coverage on a frequent basis, not those who are nominally subject to reassignment.

Id. at 67 n.17.

B. Application of the Coverage Test

The parties agree that the only dispute over Riggio's coverage regards his status as a maritime worker—not the situs of the injury. Riggio makes two arguments in favor of coverage. First, he asserts that his job as a delivery clerk, which he was performing on the day of the injury, was a covered form of employment. Second, he contends that because he worked on occasion for Maher as a checker, and was subject by Maher to assignment on any day as a checker, this too confers coverage. We do not find Riggio's first argument persuasive. Riggio admits in his brief that he "does not contend that his office activities, considered in isolation, confer [statutory coverage]." The law is clear that delivery clerks, performing the function that Riggio was on the day of his injury, are not covered under the Act. Maher Terminals, Inc. v. Farrell, 548 F.2d 476 (3d Cir. 1977); see also Sette v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 27 BRBS 223 (1993) (denying coverage for a delivery clerk).

In his second argument, Riggio urges us to look beyond the day of the injury in order to determine whether he was "engaged in maritime employment." In other words, Riggio submits that because he worked half of his time as a checker, a job that is covered under the Act, see Rock, 953F.2d at 64, and was subject to assignment as a checker, it would be improper to look merely at the moment of his injury to characterize whether he was engaged in maritime employment. Maher disagrees with this analysis and argues that our decision in Farrell, supra, is "on all fours" with the case at bar. The employee in Farrell, like Riggio on the day of his injury:

> worked in an office. He did not work on the pier, in the yard, or on the dock as a checker . . . . That on occasion he left the office to examine markings on cargo, and that in the past he had worked as a checker is not controlling. What is controlling is the nature of his primary duties. As we perceive the congressional intent, that is the sole test. Farrell's primary duties being that of a clerk and not a checker, he is excluded from coverage.

548 F.2d at 478. Despite these similarities, Riggio contends, and the Board agreed, that the analysis in Farrell is no longer valid in light of Caputo and other subsequently decided Supreme Court cases. Riggio argues persuasively that Caputo's holding that covered employees must "spend at least some of their time in indisputably longshoring operations," 432 U.S. at 273, creates a broader scope of coverage than Farrell's "primary duties" test.

For further support, Riggio notes that in our decision in Rock, we cited with approval the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit's opinion in Levins v. Benefits Review Board,724 F.2d 4 (1st Cir. 1984). Levins concerned whether an employee who was called a "book clerk" was covered under the Act. Rather than look only at the title of the employee, the First Circuit examined "the actual nature of [the employee's] regularly assigned duties as a whole." Id. at 7 (quotation omitted) (emphasis in original). The First Circuit also rejected the use of the "primary duties" test from our opinion in Farrell because the Supreme Court stated in Caputo that workers who spend "at least some of their time in indisputably longshoring operations" are covered. Id. at 8 (quoting Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273). The First Circuit examined the totality of the claimant's job, and noted that serving as a runner, a covered job, constituted not "discretionary or extraordinary occurrences, but rather a regular portion of the overall tasks to which petitioner could have been assigned as a matter of course." Id. at 9.

Other Courts of Appeals have followed the same approach as the First Circuit and looked at the totality of the employee's duties to determine whether he was engaged as a maritime employee. For example, in Boudloche v. Howard Trucking Co., 632 F.2d 1346 (5th Cir. 1980), the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit concluded that an employee who worked between 2.5 to 5 percent of his time in traditional longshoring operations was covered. Id. at 1348. The Fifth Circuit specifically rejected a "substantial portion" test—akin to our "primary duties" test in Farrell—because the Supreme Court's decisions in Caputo and Ford explained that only "some" of an employee's time must be in longshoring operations in order to be covered. Id. The Fifth Circuit was careful to note, however, that its "decision does not undertake to define the point at which a worker's employment in maritime activity becomes so momentary or episodic it will not suffice to confer status." Id.

Interestingly, Maher responds that the same aspect of Caputo upon which these Courts and Riggio rely supports its argument as well. Maher quotes our interpretation of Caputo in Rock in which we explained that the Supreme Court extended "coverage to an employee who throughout the day might have been assigned to unload a vessel but at the hour of the accident had been temporarily assigned a task that might not have been covered under the Act." 953F.2d at 63. Maher seizes on our use of the phrase, "throughout the day," to suggest that we adopted a narrow conception of protection from shifting coverage solely to, in Maher's words, "employees who walk in and out of coverage throughout the work day."

This is a misreading of Rock. As explained above, we declined to find coverage in that case because the claimant had worked for two years exclusively in a non-covered position and was only "nominally subject to reassignment" 11 to a covered job. 953 F.2d at 67 n.17. We also stated that Caputo "protects those employees who walk in and out of coverage on a frequent basis" and that Caputo followed the clear intent of the statute, "which was in part to avoid the shifting coverage caused by an employee's constant movement during the workday between land and sea." Id. In Rock, the claimant could not show that there was any real possibility of him working in a covered job.

Riggio's employment history is very different from that of the claimant in Rock; it more closely resembles those of the claimants in Levins and Boudloche. Because Maher stipulated at oral argument that Riggio spent half of his time employed as a checker, the mere fact that he was not employed in a covered position on the day of his injury, or even in the two weeks previous, does not call into question the conclusion that Riggio's regular duties involve spending "at least some of his time in indisputably longshoring operations." Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273. Further, Riggio was actually subject to reassignment as a checker, unlike the claimant in Rock, and the evidence does not support the conclusion that Riggio's engagement in maritime employment was "so momentary or episodic" as to be insufficient to confer coverage. Boudloche, 632 F.2d at1348.

In a final attempt to deny Riggio coverage, Maher argues that we should not look at the employee's overall employment history when conducting the coverage analysis and cites to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit's decision in McGray Construction Co. v. Director, OWCP, 181F.3d 1008 (9th Cir. 1999) for support. The facts in McGray, however, are easily distinguished from the case at bar. The claimant in McGray had been engaged in maritime employment in the past but had been subsequently hired by a different employer for a non-maritime job. The Ninth Circuit concluded that the claimant was not covered by the Act because it is impractical for an employer to know the prior work history of its employees and it would be unfair to treat employees working for an employer exclusively on a non-maritime job differently depending on this history. Id. at 1016. These concerns are not present in the instant case because it covers only Riggio's work history while employed by Maher, which should know that it routinely assigns Riggio to maritime employment.

We believe that the proper analysis requires us to look at the "regular portion of the overall tasks to which [the claimant] could have been assigned as a matter of course," Levins, 724 F.2d at 9, to determine whether he spends "at least some of [his] time in indisputably longshoring operations." Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273. Because Riggio spent half of his time as a checker and his overall duties included assignment as a checker, an indisputably longshoring job, he is covered under the Act even though he worked as a delivery clerk on the day of his injury. The petition for review of the Board's decision will be denied.

A True Copy:
Teste:

Clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

APPENDIX B

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
Benefits Review Board
P.O. Box 37601
Washington, DC 20013-7601

[Filed June 28, 2001]

BRB No. 00-960

VINCENT J. RIGGIO,
Claimant-Petitioner,

v.

MAHER TERMINALS, INCORPORATED,
Self-Insured Employer
Respondent.

DECISION and ORDER

Appeal of the Decision and Order on Remand of Ralph A. Romano, Administrative Law Judge, United States Department of Labor.

Before: HALL, Chief Administrative Appeals Judge, SMITH and McGRANERY, Administrative Appeals Judges.

PER CURIAM:

Claimant appeals the Decision and Order on Remand (1994-LHC-1948) of Administrative Law Judge Ralph A. Romano rendered on a claim filed pursuant to the provisions of the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, as amended, 33 U.S.C. § 901 et seq. (the Act). We must affirm the administrative law judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law if they are supported by substantial evidence, are rational, and are in accordance with law. 33 U.S.C. § 921(b)(3); O'Keeffe v. Smith, Hinchman & Grylls Associates, Inc., 380 U.S. 359 (1965).

This is the second time this case has come before the Board. The facts are not in dispute. Claimant is a clerk/checker for employer. He belongs to the checker's local, and he is on employer's permanent hire list, but he is not on a specified job list, so he can be assigned any work. Tr.1 at 38, 42-43, 47. Claimant has worked for employer in an office setting as a clerk as well as in the field and in the lanes as a checker. Id. at 45-48. On February 3, 1994, claimant was working as a delivery clerk in an office on Berth 62 of employer's facility in Port Shipley. He injured his shoulder when he pushed his chair back from the desk and one of the rollers got caught, tipping the chair. Id. at 36. Employer paid claimant benefits under the state workers' compensation law. Claimant filed a claim for benefits under the Act.

The sole issue before Administrative Law Judge Ainsworth Brown was whether claimant satisfied the Act's status requirement. Judge Brown found that claimant is a delivery clerk who falls within the clerical exclusion of Section 2(3)(A), 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A), and that even if he "had occasional forays into the lanes," he did not change his status from that of a clerical worker. Decision and Order at 3. Moreover, Judge Brown found that, as claimant did not submit more than the two weeks of employment records submitted by employer, and as his legal arguments were not persuasive, claimant failed to meet his burden of proving that he has maritime status. Therefore, Judge Brown denied benefits. Id. Claimant appealed.[1]

The Board rejected claimant's assertion that his duties as a delivery clerk, which involve paperwork and computer work in an office setting, but are related to loading and unloading, are sufficient to confer status. Riggio v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 31 BRBS 58 (1997). However, the Board held that it could not affirm Judge Brown's decision, as he thrice stated that claimant "occasionally" worked as a checker but concluded that claimant is an office-bound delivery clerk excluded from coverage. The Board stated that if claimant occasionally worked as a checker, then he did not work "exclusively" as an office clerk and the Section 2(3)(A) exclusion does not apply. Id. at 61. Consequently, the Board vacated the denial of benefits and remanded the case for further consideration using the proper standards. Id. at 61-62.

---

[1] The Director, Office of Workers' Compensation Programs (the Director), filed a response brief in support of claimant's position.

On remand, the case was assigned to Administrative Law Judge Ralph A. Romano (the administrative law judge). The administrative law judge first stated that the Board's decision was not to be interpreted as an order to automatically find in favor of claimant. Instead, he reviewed the decisions in Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249, 6 BRBS 150 (1977), Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. Rock, 953 F.2d 56, 25 BRBS 112(CRT) (3d Cir. 1992), Maher Terminals, Inc. v. Farrell, 548 F.2d 476, 5 BRBS 393 (3d Cir. 1977), and Sette v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 27 BRBS 224 (1993), for guidance. The administrative law judge read Caputo as conferring coverage on a clerk only when that clerk is subject to maritime reassignment, such as a checker, during the course of his workday, and that to read it otherwise is to go beyond its scope. Therefore, the administrative law judge denied claimant coverage, as claimant had not shown he was subject to reassignment as a checker in the same day he worked as a clerk. He also noted that claimant's past work as a checker was insufficient to show coverage under Caputo. Decision and Order on Remand at 3. Claimant again appeals the denial of benefits, and employer responds, urging affirmance.

Claimant contends the administrative law judge misinterpreted the law, as he required reassignment to maritime work, or the potential for such, within one work day in order to confer coverage. Employer asserts this is a valid interpretation of the Supreme Court's holding and the law as set forth by the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, within whose jurisdiction this case arises. Before addressing the legal issues of this case, it is helpful to examine claimant's duties in more detail.

In this case, claimant testified that he worked as both a checker and a clerk. As such, he handled paperwork for both in-coming and out-going cargo. When claimant worked as either a delivery or a receiving clerk, his work was exclusively in an office. When claimant worked as a checker, he worked in the lanes and the field. He would check seals and container numbers as well as license plate numbers, generating a document verifying that all was in order.[2] Tr.1 at 38-41, 45-46, 48, 50-52, 55-56, 62-65. Claimant estimated his time was divided evenly between the two types of work. He also testified that he has worked for two or three years in Berth 80 as a receiving or delivery clerk and that his supervisor would assign him work as a clerk whenever he could, but if he could not, claimant would go into the lanes or do other checker jobs. Tr.1 at 48-49. If no work is available at employer's facility, claimant obtains work through the union hall as a checker or a clerk. Tr.1 at 76.

Judge Brown questioned the veracity of claimant's testimony with regard to his work duties.[3] Decision and Order at [2] Claimant noted that clerks earn more than checkers because they use computers and add figures, and checkers do not, and he conceded he prefers office work. Tr.1 at 43, 48, 55-56.

---

[3] Claimant testified he worked outdoors as a checker once during the week before he was injured, although on the date of the injury, he was working as a delivery clerk in an office. Tr.1 at 49-50, 65. On cross-examination, employer presented records which established that claimant worked solely as a delivery clerk between January 25 and February 4, 1994, the two weeks prior to his injury. Emp. Ex. 1; Tr.1 at 59-62. Although he presented no records to corroborate his assertions, claimant then testified that he may have mistaken the time period, but that he does occasionally work as a checker and did so as recently as a few days before the hearing. Tr.1 at 61-62.

2-3. Due in part to this credibility issue, the Board remanded this case for reconsideration. Riggio, 31 BRBS at 61-62. On remand, employer conceded that claimant is subject to assignment as a checker and that he occasionally worked as a checker. Tr.2 at 25. The administrative law judge noted this concession and concluded that the decision was no longer affected by "Judge Brown's doubts as to the integrity of Claimant's testimony" regarding his duties. Decision and Order on Remand at 2 n.5. Thus, there remains no dispute that claimant could be assigned by and occasionally works for employer as a checker. The issue before the Board, therefore, is whether the administrative law judge correctly interpreted and applied Caputo to this case arising in the Third Circuit.

For a claim to be covered by the Act, a claimant must establish that his injury occurred upon the navigable waters of the United States, including any dry dock, or that his injury occurred on a landward area covered by Section 3(a) and that his work is maritime in nature and is not specifically excluded by the Act. 33 U.S.C. §§ 902(3), 903(a); Director, OWCP v. Perini North River Associates, 459 U.S. 297, 15 BRBS 62(CRT) (1983); P.C. Pfeiffer Co. v. Ford, 444 U.S. 69, 11 BRBS 320 (1979); Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249, 6 BRBS 150 (1977); Stone v. Ingalls Shipbuilding, Inc., 30 BRBS 209 (1996). Thus, in order to demonstrate that jurisdiction exists, a claimant must satisfy the "situs" and the "status" requirements of the Act. Id.; see also Crapanzano v. Rice Mohawk, U.S. Construction Co., Ltd., 30 BRBS 81 (1996).

Generally, a claimant satisfies the "status" requirement if he is an employee engaged in work which is integral to the loading, unloading, constructing, or repairing of vessels. See 33 U.S.C. §902(3); Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Schwalb, 493 U.S. 40, 46, 23 BRBS 96(CRT) (1989). To satisfy this requirement, he need only "spend at least some of [his] time in indisputably longshoring operations." Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273, 6 BRBS at 165. Although an employee is covered if some portion of his activities constitute covered employment, those activities must be more than episodic, momentary or incidental to non-maritime work.[4] Boudloche v. Howard Trucking Co., 632 F.2d 1346, 12 BRBS 732 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 915 (1981); Coleman v. Atlantic Container Service, Inc., 22 BRBS 309 (1989), aff'd, 904 F.2d 611, 23 BRBS 101(CRT) (11th Cir. 1990). Restating the Schwalb test, the Third Circuit deems activities "maritime" if they are "an integral or essential part of the chain of events leading up to the loading, unloading, or building of a vessel." Rock, 953 F.2d at 67, 25 BRBS at 121(CRT). Employees who are hired exclusively to perform office clerical work are specifically excluded from coverage, 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A);[5] Stone, 30 BRBS at 213, even if their work is integral to the loading or construction of ships.

Under the Act, checkers have maritime status. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249, 6 BRBS 150; Levins v. Benefits Review Board, 724 F.2d 4, 16 BRBS 24(CRT) (1st Cir. 1984); see also Stone, 30 BRBS at 211 n.4. Office-bound delivery clerks who process

---

[4] An "episodic" activity is one which is "discretionary or extraordinary" as opposed to one which is "a regular portion of the overall tasks to which a claimant may be assigned. . . ." Levins v. Benefits Review Board, 724 F.2d 4, 16 BRBS 24(CRT) (1st Cir. 1984); see also McGoey v. Chiquita Brands Int'l, 30 BRBS 237 (1997); Stone, 30 BRBS at 213.

[5] Section 2(3)(A) provides:

> (3) The term "employee" means any person engaged in maritime employment, including any longshoreman or other person engaged in longshoring operations, and any harbor-worker including a ship repairman, shipbuilder, and ship-breaker, but such term does not include—
>
> (A) individuals employed exclusively to perform office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work [if such persons are covered by State workers' compensation laws];

33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A) (emphasis added).

paperwork for the release of cargo are not covered. Farrell, 548 F.2d 476, 5 BRBS 393; Stone, 30 BRBS at 213; Sette, 27 BRBS 224. In a case where these jobs were combined, and the claimant was subject to reassignment as a checker, the Board held that the employee is covered. Caldwell v. Universal Maritime Service Corp., 22 BRBS 398 (1989).

Claimant first contends the administrative law judge erred in concluding he is an excluded clerical worker. Rather, he asserts that his occasional work as a checker removes him from the Section 2(3)(A) exclusion and brings him within the Act's coverage. The facts establish that claimant is on employer's permanent hire list and is assigned work as an office clerk. If there is no clerical work available, claimant may be assigned to work as a checker, and it is undisputed that claimant occasionally works for employer as a checker. Because Section 2(3)(A) excludes those "individuals employed exclusively to perform office clerical . . . work[,]" 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A), and because it is undisputed claimant occasionally works as a checker, his work for employer is not exclusively office clerical work, and he is not excluded from coverage by Section 2(3)(A). Unlike the situations in Farrell and Sette where office-bound clerks were excluded from coverage, Farrell, 548 F.2d at 478, 5 BRBS at 396; Sette, 27 BRBS at 228-229, the distinguishing factors present in Caldwell, 22 BRBS 398, where the claimant regularly worked as a checker outside the office, are present here. Thus, as it is undisputed that claimant's regular work assignments for employer include assignment as a checker, as we stated in our prior decision, Section 2(3)(A) is inapplicable. Jannuzzelli v. Maersk Container Service Co., 25 BRBS 66 (1991) (Clark, J., dissenting); Caldwell, 22 BRBS 398; compare with Ladd v. Tampa Shipyards, Inc., 32 BRBS 228 (1998); Stone, 30 BRBS at 211. As claimant spent "some of his time" working for employer in covered longshoring activities, he is a covered employee. Ford, 444 U.S. 69, 11 BRBS 320; Caputo, 432 U.S. 249, 6 BRBS 150. Therefore, we reverse the administrative law judge's decision to exclude claimant from coverage based on his office clerical work.

Ordinarily, the fact that claimant regularly worked as a checker and is thus not excluded from coverage would end our inquiry into coverage. However, in this case, the administrative law judge created an additional requirement that claimant prove he was subject to reassignment to maritime work within the same work day in order to be covered.[6] Therefore, we must address claimant's contention that the administrative law judge erred in interpreting case precedent to establish a "same day of injury" test.[7] In response, employer asserts that the administrative law judge has correctly interpreted the relevant cases.

In finding that claimant is not a covered employee, the administrative law judge declined to read Caputo as [6] The administrative law judge noted that there was no evidence claimant was ever reassigned to checker or other traditional longshore duties during any work day when he worked as a clerk. Decision and Order at 2, n.4. There is, however, also no evidence claimant could not be so reassigned. In the initial appeal in this case, we found it unnecessary to address the Director's argument that Section 20(a), 33 U.S.C. § 920(a), 33 U.S.C. § 920(a), applies in the resolution of the case, noting that the Board has consistently held it does not apply to legal issues relating to coverage. Riggio, 31 BRBS at 62, n.4. However, Section 20(a) presumes, "in the absence of substantial evidence to the contrary . . . that the claim comes within the provisions of the Act." Thus, questions of fact underlying coverage may well be subject to Section 20(a), placing the burden of production of employer. See Fleischman v. Director, OWCP, 137 F.2d 131, 32 BRBS 28(CRT)(2d Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 119 S.Ct. 444 (1998). We need not fully explore this issue here, as this case is resolved based on the legal analysis.

---

[7] Resolution of the case before us does not raise the issue of the how much time claimant spent, or needed to spend, performing longshore work to satisfy the status requirement. Therefore, we need not address claimant's argument that he should be held to a lower "quantum of time" in covered employment because his non-covered clerical work has a strong nexus to maritime operations.

extending coverage to employees unless they are subject to reassignment to covered work on the same day they are assigned to non-covered work. The administrative law judge focused on the fact that neither claimant in Caputo was a clerk. One employee, Blundo, was working as a checker when injured and was covered. The other employee, Caputo, was working as a terminal laborer, and with regard to "the day" Caputo was hired and injured, the court stated:

> In that capacity, he could have been assigned to any one of a number of tasks necessary to the transfer of cargo between land and maritime transportation. . . . Not only did he have no idea when he set out in the morning which of these tasks he might be assigned, but in fact his assignment could have been changed during the day. Thus, had Caputo avoided injury and completed loading the consignee's truck on the day of the accident, he then could have been assigned to unload a lighter. Since it is clear that he would have been covered while unloading such a vessel, to exclude him from the Act's coverage in the morning but include him in the afternoon would be to revitalize the shifting and fortuitous coverage that Congress intended to eliminate.

Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273-274, 6 BRBS at 165-166 (emphasis added) (citations omitted). The administrative law judge also cited Rock in summarizing employer's argument that a claimant normally subject to reassignment is not covered. In this regard, in discussing Caputo, the Third Circuit stated:

> The [Supreme] Court sought to avoid the "shifting coverage" that the amendments attempted to eradicate by extending coverage to an employee who throughout the day might have been assigned to unload a vessel but at the hour of the accident had been temporarily assigned to a task that might not have been covered under the Act.

Rock, 953 F.2d at 62, 25 BRBS at 116-117(CRT) (emphasis added). The Rock court also noted:

> Although the Director notes that Rock was officially subject to reassignment to longshoring positions and argues that under [Caputo], this fact entitles Rock to coverage, the Director misinterpreted [Caputo]. The Court in [Caputo] sought to prevent the hazards of shifting coverage by covering employees who at one moment might be involved in loading but at another moment might be finishing that job and starting another that would not be covered. The Court was following the clear intent of the statute, which was in part to avoid the shifting coverage caused by an employee's constant movement during the workday between sea and land. The [Caputo] position cannot be stretched to cover Rock, who voluntarily chose a position that would no longer involve him in the dangers of loading and unloading, and whose only occupation in the two years in which he held his new job was to drive the courtesy van. [Caputo] protects those who walk in and out of coverage on a frequent basis, not those who are nominally subject to reassignment.

Rock, 953 F.2d at 67 n.17, 25 BRBS at 121 (CRT) n.17 (emphasis added). Contrary to the administrative law judge's analysis, these cases do not support the administrative law judge's creation of a "same day of injury" status test, particularly when the language quoted above is placed in context.

In Caputo, the Supreme Court addressed whether claimant Caputo, a member of a stevedoring gang who had been hired for the day as a terminal laborer and was injured while engaged in the non-maritime work of loading a truck, was a covered employee. The Supreme Court held that he met the status requirement based on his overall employment. In reaching its decision, and pertinent to the case herein, the Court rejected the notion that a claimant must be covered at the "moment of injury." It stated:

> The Act focuses primarily on occupations—longshoreman, harbor worker. . . . Both the text and the history demonstrate a desire to provide continuous coverage throughout their employment to these amphibious workers who, without the amendments, would be covered only for part of their activity. It seems clear, therefore, that when Congress said it wanted to cover "longshoremen," it had in mind persons whose employment is such that they spend at least some of their time in indisputably longshoring operations and who, without the 1972 Amendments, would be covered for only part of their activity.

Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273, 6 BRBS at 165 (emphasis added). Thus, although Caputo was injured during the performance of non-maritime work, he was covered because his occupation was longshoring. The Court continued its discussion with the example, quoted above, of a worker whose assignments could be changed within the course of one work day. However, it did not limit coverage to only those employees whose duties changed during a day as opposed to those assigned different tasks day by day. Rather, the Court used this example to demonstrate how incongruous application of a "moment of injury" test could be if an employee's afternoon work was covered but his morning duties were not. The same is true if an employee is covered Monday through Thursday, but happens to be assigned to load trucks all day Friday. Both employees perform the same occupation, that of a longshoreman, and are engaged in maritime work "some of the time." To read the Caputo language as limiting consideration of an employee's activities to a 24-hour period is to render moot the express focus on occupations. In addition, it converts the Court's holding that coverage extends to those who spend "some of their time" in longshoring operations to a requirement that they spend "some of the day" in such work.

Further support that "status" is an occupational test can be found in the Supreme Court's decision in Ford, 444 U.S. 69, 11 BRBS 320. In that case, the Supreme Court reiterated its rejection of the "point of rest" theory and held that two land-based workers involved in intermediate steps in the loading process were covered employees. The Court stated that "[i]n adopting an occupational test that focuses on loading and unloading, Congress anticipated" that some land-based "workers doing tasks traditionally performed by longshoremen" would be covered. Ford, 444 U.S. at 80, 82, 11 BRBS at 326, 328. Moreover, instead of making the coverage determination based upon which union the worker is in or upon "the employer's whim" in assigning work, "the crucial factor is the nature of the activity to which a worker may be assigned." Id., 444 U.S. at 82-83, 11 BRBS at 328-239. There was no discussion of limiting consideration of work assignments to those within a specified time period.

Moreover, in following Caputo, the circuit courts have not restricted the occupational test focusing on whether a worker spends "some of the time" in maritime work to situations where the maritime work was on the same day. The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, in Atlantic Container Service, Inc. v. Coleman, 904 F.2d 611, 23 BRBS 101(CRT) (11th Cir. 1990), affirmed the Board's holding that a chassis and container repairman was a covered employee. In addressing this issue, the Eleventh Circuit discussed the Supreme Court's Caputo decision, stating:

> Finding that the worker who was injured while loading trucks on land could have been assigned, on any day, to unload a vessel at the pier, the Court determined that he > was therefore covered under the LHWCA for his purely land-based activities.

Coleman, 904 F.2d at 615, 23 BRBS at 104 (CRT) (emphasis added). As Coleman's overall duties facilitated the movement of cargo, because part of his time was spent in repairing chassis and containers used within the port facility, even though he was injured on a day he was assigned to repair a truck bound inland, he was covered. Additionally, in Levins, 724 F.2d 4, 16 BRBS 24(CRT), the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit reversed the Board's decision and held that a book clerk who usually worked in an office but occasionally performed the duties of a checker was a covered employee. It stated that the issue of status must be resolved by looking to "the actual nature of [the claimant's] regularly assigned duties as a whole," that is, those to which he may be assigned "as a matter of course," as opposed to his title, classification or his primary duties. Id., 724 F.2d at 7, 9, 16 BRBS at 30, 33(CRT) (citing Prolerized New England Co. v. Benefits Review Board, 637 F.2d 30, 12 BRBS 808 (1st Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 938 (1981) (emphasis in original)). In Levins, the claimant's job required him to be physically present at the terminal during the loading and unloading of ships under 300 tons as well as to inspect cargo on an as needed basis. Thus, his "regular" clerical duties included tasks similar to those of a checker, although such work was not necessarily performed daily or even weekly. Accordingly, his title of "book clerk" did not preclude coverage as review of his occupation demonstrated that he regularly performed duties which were not "discretionary or extraordinary occurrences, but rather a regular portion of the overall tasks to which petitioner could have been assigned as a matter of course." Id., 724 F.2d at 9, 16 BRBS at 33(CRT) (emphasis in original). In Universal Fabricators, Inc. v. Smith, 878 F.2d 843, 22 BRBS 104(CRT) (5th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1070 (1990), the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed the Board's holding that a structural fitter, who was injured while setting a floor, was a covered employee, as his regular duties included performing undeniably maritime activities, and his injury on a day when he performed non-maritime work did not divest him of coverage.

Cases previously decided by the Board also support claimant's position that the administrative law judge interpreted Caputo too narrowly. For example, in Zeringue v. McDermott, Inc., 32 BRBS 75 (1998), the Board held that a bulldozer operator, injured during the course of non-maritime work, was covered because he spent some time, once every two to four months, using the bulldozer to assist in barge load-out operations. In Jones v. Aluminum Co. of America, 31 BRBS 130 (1997), the Board held that the decedent was a covered employee because his work maintaining and repairing the conveyor system used to unload bauxite, although infrequent, was a regular, non-discretionary part of his job, meeting the "some of the time" requirement. In McGoey v. Chiquita Brands Int'l, 30 BRBS 237 (1997), the Board concluded that a clerical employee, who was injured at his desk, was a covered employee because, although it occurred only once in the year before his injury, he was required to assist in the unloading process when his supervisor was absent. Similarly, a clerk-checker, who worked as a clerk but then was temporarily assigned by his employer as a checker for a period of eight or nine months, and was still subject to such reassignment upon returning to his duties as a clerk, was a covered employee. Caldwell, 22 BRBS 398. In Thornton v. Brown & Root, Inc., 23 BRBS 75 (1989), the Board held that a crane rigger, who worked on the construction of offshore platforms and who was injured while dumping materials off a truck, was a covered employee because seven to ten times per year, as needed, he helped in load-out operations.

The common thread is whether the claimant performs maritime duties as a regular portion of his overall duties. Dobey v Johnson Controls, 33 BRBS 63 (1999) (traffic officer who alternated as marine policeman covered); Lewis v. Sunnen Crane Service, Inc., 31 BRBS 34 (1997) (crane operator subject to regular maritime assignments covered); Ljubic v. United Food Processors, 30 BRBS 143 (1996) (maintenance supervisor with maritime duties covered); Jannuzzelli, 25 BRBS 66 (office clerk required to clock in dock workers covered); Wuellet v. Scappoose Sand & Gravel Co., 18 BRBS 108 (1986) (mining facility welder/mechanic subject to assignment at barge facility covered). Provided the employee is required to perform some maritime work as a part of his regular duties, it is his overall occupation, and not his specific daily activities, which brings him within the Act's coverage.

Despite such overwhelming precedent, employer argues that the Third Circuit's comments in Rock demonstrate that the administrative law judge properly interpreted the Caputo ruling. However, reliance on Rock for creation of a "same day of injury" test is also misplaced. There is no indication in Rock that the Third Circuit intended to create a "daily" test. In Rock, the Third Circuit was faced with the issue of whether a courtesy van driver, who transported passengers within the marine terminal and had performed this job for several years, was a covered employee. In deciding the case, the court examined Supreme Court decisions, as well as its previous decisions, and it concluded there must be "some nexus between the employee's activities and either cargo-handling or shipbuilding. . . ." Rock, 953 F.2d at 65, 25 BRBS at 119(CRT). Despite acknowledging a "slight nexus with the loading process" because Rock occasionally transported longshoremen, nevertheless the Third Circuit determined that a courtesy van driver is not covered by the Act because his job is "too remote" from the loading and unloading process. Rock, 953 F.2d at 65-66, 25 BRBS at 119-120(CRT).

In discussing Caputo in Rock, the court stated that the Supreme Court sought to avoid a shifting coverage problem to a worker whose duties changed "throughout the day." Rock, 953 F.2d at 62, 25 BRBS at 116-117(CRT). This statement reflects the facts relating to claimant Caputo's job rather than a shift from the Caputo Court's occupational focus. Additionally, in addressing the Director's argument that Rock was subject to reassignment as a longshoreman and should be covered, the Third Circuit noted that Caputo protects those who "walk in and out of coverage on a frequent basis[.]" Rock, 953 F.2d at 62 n.17, 25 BRBS at 121 n.17(CRT). To infer that these phrases give rise to a "same day of injury" test by requiring an employee to be assigned maritime work at least part of every day to be covered is to read them out of context.[8] The specific facts in Rock demonstrated that the possibility of claimant's walking in and out of coverage was remote. The court noted that although Rock may have been subject to reassignment as a longshoreman due to his union membership, such reassignment possibilities were nominal, as the evidence established that he had not been assigned maritime work for two years. As Rock essentially had little or no likelihood for reassignment, the Third Circuit was unwilling to confer coverage on the slim possibility that he could be reassigned. Id. These facts distinguish Rock from the present case, as claimant was actually assigned work as a checker and thus meets the occupational test as a longshoreman. The claimant in Rock, with no such reassignments, was not covered because his occupation as a van driver lacked a sufficient nexus to loading operations.

We also reject employer's assertion that the Supreme Court, in its decision in Harbor Tug & Barge Co. v. Papai,

---

[8] In Rock, the Third Circuit favorably cited the First Circuit's decision in Levins wherein the claimant, on some days, performed the duties of a checker. Rock, 953 F.2d at 65, 25 BRBS at 119(CRT).

520 U.S. 548, 31 BRBS 34(CRT) (1997), eliminated the Caputo occupational test, making room for the administrative law judge's "same day of injury" test. Initially, Papai is distinguishable in that it arises under the Jones Act, 46 U.S.C. §688(a), and not the Longshore Act, and the two are mutually exclusive. Because the two statutes were not designed in conjunction to serve the same purpose, they need not be reconciled or interpreted in the same way. Erlenbaugh v. United States, 409 U.S. 239 (1972); Jones v. Aluminum Co. of America, __ BRBS __, BRB Nos. 00-696/A (April 9, 2001); Powers v. Sea Ray Boats, Inc., 31 BRBS 206, 211-212 (1998). The decision in Papai does not address the occupational test under the Longshore Act at all, as it is simply not relevant to the case or the test for coverage under the Jones Act. Moreover, the cases differ on the facts. In Papai, the Court addressed whether an employee, hired for the day to paint a docked tug boat, was a "seaman" under the Jones Act. The Supreme Court determined that Papai was not a "seaman" under the Jones Act, as he did not have a substantial connection to a vessel, or fleet of vessels owned by a common employer, in navigation. Papai, 520 U.S. at 560, 31 BRBS at 37, 39(CRT). While Papai had been hired by this employer a number of times during the 2.5 years preceding his injury, his engagements were discrete and separate from the one in question, and although he may have worked as a seaman in the past for this or other employers, his work was not on a fleet of vessels under common ownership or control. Thus, rejecting the use of a multiple employer test, the Court held that Papai's work as a seaman prior to his injury did not establish coverage under the Jones Act for this injury.

The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in McGray Construction Co. v. Director, OWCP, 181 F.3d 1008, 33 BRBS 81(CRT) (9th Cir. 1999), similarly does not support employer's position in this case. In McGray Construction, claimant Hurston was working as a pile driver/pier construction worker on a non-maritime project for employer when he was injured. Although he had a history of being hired out of a union hall and working on maritime projects for other employers, the Ninth Circuit stated that such history does not make Hurston a maritime employee where he is hired specifically for a non-maritime job. The court reasoned that Hurston was "engaged" by his employer for a particular non-maritime job as a pile driver/construction worker, and "engaged," as used by the Act, means "engaged on this job." The non-maritime duties were his sole duties on this project for this employer, and consequently, Hurston was not "walking in and out of coverage" during this employment as if he were hired by an employer to perform both maritime and non-maritime tasks. Consequently, the Ninth Circuit rejected a multiple employer test, citing Papai and holding claimant Hurston could not obtain longshore coverage merely because of his long history of working in maritime jobs for various employers where the job for which he was hired by the employer, and on which he was injured, was exclusively non-maritime. McGray Construction, 181 F.3d at 1014-1016, 33 BRBS at 86-87(CRT). The court in no way limited the nature of the work inquiry to a particular day, but limited it to the nature of the work to be performed for a particular employer. It is undisputed here that employer assigned claimant both checker and clerical work.

In summary, we agree with claimant that the administrative law judge erred in creating a "same day of injury" status test. Such a test is not supported by law and too nearly resembles the defunct "moment of injury" theory. The administrative law judge's test ignores the occupational focus on claimant's overall employment. As he was assigned to work as a checker by employer as a part of his regular duties for employer, claimant is covered by Section 2(3).

Accordingly, the administrative law judge's Decision and Order on Remand is reversed. The case is remanded to the administrative law judge for consideration of any remaining issues.

SO ORDERED.

/s/_____
BETTY JEAN HALL, Chief
Administrative Appeals Judge

/s/_____
ROY P. SMITH
Administrative Appeals Judge

/s/_____
REGINA C. McGRANERY
Administrative Appeals Judge

APPENDIX C

U.S. Department of Labor
Office of Administrative Law Judges
Suite 405
2600 Mt. Ephraim Avenue
Camden, NJ 08104

(856) 757-5312
(856) 757-5403 (FAX)

DATE: June 19, 2000

CASE NO.: 1994-LHC-01948

OWCP NO.: 02-113391

BRB NO.: 96-1136

In the Matter of

VINCENT J. RIGGIO
Claimant

v.

MAHER TERMINALS, INC.
Employer

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

The Benefits Review Board (the BRB) has remanded this case because it could not affirm the decision of Judge A. Brown that Claimant was statutorily[1] excluded from coverage by reason of his work as a receiving/delivery clerk at Employer. Such decision is said to be inconsistent with the evidence that Claimant was subject to reassignment to, and/or actually worked as, a checker at Employer, citing Caldwell v. Universal Maritime Service Corp., 22 BRBS 398 (1989).

---

[1] 33 U.S.C. 902(3)(A).

Predictably, Claimant urges adoption of the BRB's inability to affirm the absence of status, i.e. urges that status be found to have been established.[2]

Employer argues that the Third Circuit Court of Appeals[3] has put this issue to rest, holding that a clerk who ". . . [has] in the past . . . worked as a checker . . ." (Farrell, at 478), and/or is ". . . nominally subject to reassignment"[4] (Rock, at note 17), is not entitled to status.[5]

The BRB remand order ". . . for further consideration using the proper standards", is not interpreted as a pro forma return of this case for entry of a decision in Claimant's favor (Transcript, at 4-7).

In Sette, supra, the BRB acknowledged that Farrell, supra, as re-eonfirmed in Rock, supra, directs a finding of no status where an employee performs once clerical duties exclusively. The BRB, however, apparently withheld its acceptance of Farrell, and Rock insofar as those holdings suggest that an employee who ". . . spent some of his time at work [at] other than . . . clerical duties" was not covered, citing to its holding in Caldwell v. Universal Maritime Service Corp., supra, where the employee working in an office was subject to

---

[2] Claimant's alternative theory that a clerk's duties, being integral to the loading and unloading process, confer status, is not addressed herein, as the BRB unequivocally rejected that claim, citing Sette v. Maher Terminals, 27 BRBS 224 (1993).

[3] Maher Terminals v. Farrell, 548 F.2d 476 (1977); Sea-land Service v. Rock, 953 F.2d 56 (1992).

[4] There is no evidence that Claimant was ever reassigned to checker or other traditional longshore duties during any work day while working as a clerk.

[5] Employer concedes that Claimant had worked occasionally as a checker, and that he was subject to reassignment as a checker (Transcript, at 25). Thus, Judge Brown's doubts as to the integrity of Claimant's testimony as to the details of his work-duty history do not impact on the decision reached here.

reassignment as a (covered) checker. The Supreme Court's decision in Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249 (1977) is said to have justified this conclusion (Sette, at FN 2, FN 4).

Neither of the employees in Caputo were involved in any way with the duties of a clerk, as was Claimant here.[6] One was a checker, and the other a member of a gang hired as a terminal laborer. The checker was found to have been involved in a task integral to the unloading process, and thus covered. The terminal laborer was subject to reassignment ". . . to any one of a number of tasks necessary to the transfer of cargo between land and maritime transportation, including stuffing and stripping containers, loading and discharging lighters and barges, and loading and unloading trucks", and his assignment ". . . could have changed during the day" (Caputo, at 273-4). He was found covered since had he not been injured while loading a truck in the morning (a task not covered), but then injured while unloading a vessel (a covered task) in the afternoon, status would have been (anomalously) conferred while he was doing his afternoon chores, but denied while he was doing his morning chores (Caputo, at 214).

The holding in Caputo informs resolution of the instant case only insofar as its analysis of the terminal laborer, since the checker there was not involved in any movement between/among jobs.

I find that to read Caputo as conferring coverage upon a clerk subject to reassignment (but not during the same day) as a checker (as here),[7] where Caputo, conferred coverage upon

---

[6] At FN 34, the Court notes the Farrell Court's rejection of the conclusion that a clerk's function was such an integral part of longshoring operations to be a covered job, since such conclusion ". . . showed no concern with the fact that the employee did not handle cargo."

[7] Or, to read Caputo as conferring coverage upon a clerk, who, on some days, has worked as a checker.

a terminal laborer who unloaded trucks but was subject to reassignment on the same day he unloaded trucks to other (cargo handling) traditionally acknowledged longshore duties, goes beyond the reach of Caputo.

Accordingly, in applying the standards proper to resolution of the subject issue, I find Claimant lacked the status requirement necessary for coverage under the Act.

ORDER

Based upon the foregoing, the claim of Vincent J. Riggio is DENIED.

/s/ Ralph A. Romano
Ralph A. Romano
Administrative Law Judge

DATED: June 19, 2000
Camden, New Jersey

APPENDIX D

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
Benefits Review Board
P.O. Box 37601
Washington, DC 20013-7601

[Filed May 27, 1997]

BRB No. 96-1136

VINCENT J. RIGGIO,
Claimant-Petitioner,

v.

MAHER TERMINALS, INCORPORATED,
Self-Insured
Employer Respondent,

DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF WORKERS' COMPENSATION PROGRAMS, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Respondent.

DECISION and ORDER

Appeal of the Decision and Order Denying Benefits of Ainsworth H. Brown, Administrative Law Judge, United States Department of Labor.

Before: HALL, Chief Administrative Appeals Judge, SMITH and McGRANERY, Administrative Appeals Judges.

PER CURIAM:

Claimant appeals the Decision and Order Denying Benefits (94-LHC-1948) of Administrative Law Judge Ainsworth H. Brown rendered on a claim filed pursuant to the provisions of the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, as amended, 33 U.S.C. § 901 et seq. (the Act). We must affirm the administrative law judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law if they are supported by substantial evidence, are rational, and are in accordance with law. 33 U.S.C. § 921(b)(3); O'Keeffe v. Smith, Hinchman & Grylls Associates, Inc., 380 U.S. 359 (1965).

Claimant testified he is a clerk/checker for employer. He belongs to the checker's local. Although he is on employer's permanent hire list, he is not on a specified job list, and he testified he can be assigned work as either a clerk in an office or a checker in the lanes or the field. Tr. at 38, 42-43, 45-48. On February 3, 1994, claimant was working as a delivery clerk in an office on Berth 62 of employer's facility in Port Shipley. He injured his shoulder when he pushed his chair back from the desk and one of the rollers got caught, tipping the chair. Id. at 36. Employer paid claimant benefits under the state workers' compensation law. Claimant filed a claim for benefits under the Act.

The sole issue before the administrative law judge was whether claimant satisfied the status requirement set forth in Section 2(3) of the Act, 33 U.S.C. § 902(3) (1988). The administrative law judge found that claimant is a delivery clerk who falls under the clerical exclusion of Section 2(3)(A), 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A) (1988), and that even if he "had occasional forays into the lanes," he did not change his status from that of a clerical worker. Decision and Order at 3. Thus, the administrative law judge found that claimant failed to meet his burden of proving that he is covered under the Act. Id. Claimant appeals the denial of benefits, and the Director, Office of Workers' Compensation Programs (the Director), responds, in agreement with claimant. Employer responds, urging affirmance.

Claimant contends the administrative law judge erred in denying benefits. Specifically, claimant contends the administrative law judge erred in finding him to be an excluded clerical employee pursuant to Section 2(3)(A) of the Act because his work as a clerk bears a close functional relationship with the loading and unloading process. Moreover, claimant asserts that he is covered under the Act because of his work as a checker. The Director argues in favor of claimant, initially contending that the Section 20(a), 33 U.S.C. § 920(a), presumption should be applied to the "coverage determinative facts;" thus, he argues, the burden of persuasion lies on employer to prove that claimant is not a maritime employee. The Director also argues that the administrative law judge erred in denying benefits as a matter of law, as his findings of fact establish that claimant worked some of the time as a checker—an indisputably longshore activity that is not excluded. Employer argues that the administrative law judge properly relied on Maher Terminals, Inc. v. Farrell, 548 F.2d 476, 5 BRBS 393 (3d Cir. 1977), and on Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. Rock, 953 F.2d 56, 25 BRBS 112 (CRT) (3d Cir. 1992), to conclude that claimant's work as a delivery clerk does not bring him into the realm of coverage, as that type of work does not expose him to the longshore hazards contemplated by Congress in conferring coverage.

For a claim to be covered by the Act, a claimant must establish that his injury occurred upon the navigable waters of the United States, including any dry dock, or that his injury occurred on a landward area covered by Section 3(a) and that his work is maritime in nature and is not specifically excluded by the Act. 33 U.S.C. §§ 902(3), 903(a); Director, OWCP v. Perini North River Associates, 459 U.S. 297, 15 BRBS 62 (CRT) (1983); P.C. Pfeiffer Co. v. Ford, 444 U.S. 69, 11 BRBS 320 (1979); Northeast Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249, 6 BRBS 150 (1977); Stone v. Ingalls Shipbuilding, Inc., 30 BRBS 209 (1996); Kennedy v. American Bridge Co., 30 BRBS 1 (1996). Thus, in order to demonstrate that coverage exists, a claimant must satisfy the "situs" and the "status" requirements of the Act.[1] Id.; see also Crapanzano v. Rice Mohawk, U.S. Construction Co., Ltd., 30 BRBS 81 (1996).

---

[1] Employer conceded that the situs requirement was met in this case. Decision and Order at 2.

Generally, a claimant satisfies the "status" requirement if he is an employee engaged in work which is integral to the loading, unloading, constructing, or repairing of vessels. See 33 U.S.C. §902(3); Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Schwalb, 493 U.S. 40, 23 BRBS 96 (CRT) (1989). To satisfy this requirement, he need only "spend at least some of [his] time in indisputably longshoring operations." Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273, 6 BRBS at 165. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, which has jurisdiction over this case, deems activities "maritime" if they are "an integral or essential part of the chain of events leading up to the loading, unloading, or building of a vessel." Rock, 953 F.2d at 67, 25 BRBS at 121 (CRT). Employees who are hired exclusively to perform office clerical work are specifically excluded from coverage. 33 U.S.C. §902(3)(A) (1988);[2] Stone, 30 BRBS at 213. Both claimant and the Director contend that claimant's duties as a checker prevent him from being considered "exclusively clerical."

In this case, claimant testified that he worked as both a checker and a clerk. Claimant testified that when he worked as a clerk, his work was exclusively in an office. As a receiving clerk, he would receive the report generated by the checker and enter the information into a computer. As a delivery clerk, he would enter information into the computer from the delivery order and generate a report to clear the cargo for land transport. Claimant was injured while working

---

[2] Section 2(3)(A), 33 U.S.C. § 902(3)(A) (1988) (emphasis added), provides:

> (3) The term "employee" means any person engaged in maritime employment, including any longshoreman or other person engaged in longshoring operations, and any harbor-worker including a ship repairman, shipbuilder, and ship-breaker, but such term does not include—
>
> > (A) individuals employed exclusively to perform office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work [if such persons are covered by State workers' compensation laws].

as a clerk. Claimant stated that when he worked as a checker, he worked in the trucking lanes and on the pier receiving and delivering containers to a ship in conjunction with crane operations. He would check seals and container numbers as well as license plate numbers, generating a document verifying that all was in order. Tr. at 38-41, 45-46, 48, 50-52, 55-56, 62-65. He noted, however, that clerks earn more than checkers because they use computers and add figures and checkers do not. Id. at 43, 55-56. Claimant stated that his time was divided evenly between the two types of work. He testified that he prefers working as a clerk and that his supervisor assigns him this work whenever he can. If claimant is unable to obtain a clerk position, he accepts work as a checker. Id. at 48-49, 76.

The administrative law judge questioned claimant's credibility, stating:

> It is clear from the testimony that the Claimant's recollection of work in the lanes immediately preceding the injury is incorrect and his reference to a 50/50 split of his time may be viewed as suspect as well. It is not an accurate appraisal of his testimony to say that it is "undisputed" as his veracity was directly challenged on cross-examination with telling effect and not rehabilitated on redirect.

Decision and Order at 2-3.[3] The administrative law judge, however, acknowledged three times in his decision that [3] Claimant testified that sometime during the week before he was injured, he worked outdoors as a checker, although on the date of the injury, he was working as a delivery clerk in an office. Tr. at 49-50, 65. On cross-examination, employer presented records which established that claimant worked solely as a delivery clerk between January 25 and February 4, 1994. Emp. Ex. 1; Tr. at 59-62. Claimant then testified that he may have mistaken the time period, but that he does occasionally work as a checker and did so as recently as a few days before the hearing. Tr. at 61-62. In light of claimant's erroneous recollection of his work just prior to the injury, the administrative law judge viewed claimant's testimony concerning the rest of his work history as suspect. Decision and Order at 2-3.

---

claimant functioned "on occasion" as a checker. Despite this acknowledgment, he concluded that claimant failed to establish his "status" by a preponderance of the evidence. Therefore, he found that claimant is a clerical worker excluded from coverage. Id. at 2-3.

Checkers are covered under the Act. Caputo, 432 U.S. at 249, 6 BRBS at 150; Levins v. Benefits Review Board, 724 F.2d 4, 16 BRBS 24 (CRT) (1st Cir. 1984); see also Stone, 30 BRBS at 211 n.4. A claimant employed exclusively as an office-bound delivery clerk who processes paperwork for the release of cargo, however, is not covered under the Act as amended in 1984, even if his work is integral to the ship-building, ship repair or loading/unloading process. Sette v. Maher Terminals, Inc., 27 BRBS 224 (1993); see also Farrell, 548 F.2d at 478, 5 BRBS at 396; Hall v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 24 BRBS 1 (1990); Bergquist v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 23 BRBS 131 (1989). We therefore reject claimant's contention that his duties as a delivery clerk, which solely involve paperwork and computer work in an office setting, though related to loading and unloading, are sufficient to confer status. Sette, 27 BRBS at 224.

Nevertheless, we cannot affirm the administrative law judge's finding that claimant is excluded from coverage. In a case where a claimant worked as an office clerk but was subject to reassignment as a checker, the Board held that he is covered. Caldwell v. Universal Maritime Service Corp., 22 BRBS 398 (1989). Thus, we hold that the administrative law judge erred in thrice stating that claimant "occasionally" worked as a checker but then concluding that claimant is an office bound delivery clerk excluded from coverage. If claimant occasionally works as a checker, he is not "exclusively" a clerical employee, and the exclusion in Section 2(3)(A) is not applicable. Caldwell, 22 BRBS at 398. By acknowledging claimant's work as a checker but finding this did not change his "preferred status" as a delivery clerk, it appears the administrative law judge applied a "moment of injury" or "substantial portion" test to this case. Both standards have been rejected. Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273, 6 BRBS at 165; Levins, 724 F.2d at 4, 16 BRBS at 24 (CRT); Schwabenland v. Sanger Boats, 683 F.2d 309, 16 BRBS 78 (CRT) (9th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1170 (1983); Graziano v. General Dynamics Corp., 663 F.2d 340, 14 BRBS 52 (1st Cir. 1981). A person is "engaged in maritime employment" under Section 2(3) if he spends "at least some of [his] time" engaged in maritime work. Ford, 444 U.S. at 83 n.18, 11 BRBS at 328 n.18; Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273-274, 6 BRBS at 165; McGoey v. Chiquita Brands International, ___ BRBS ___, BRB No. 96-593 (Jan. 28, 1997). Therefore, if claimant is subject to reassignment as a checker and/or occasionally worked as a checker, claimant's employment is covered under the Act. Caldwell, 22 BRBS at 398. Consequently, we vacate the denial of benefits, and we remand the ease for further consideration using the proper standards.[4] Caputo, 432 U.S. at 273-274, 6 BRBS at 165; McGoey, slip op at 2; Caldwell, 22 BRBS at 398.

Accordingly, the administrative law judge's Decision and Order Denying Benefits is vacated, and the case is remanded for further consideration in accordance with this opinion.

SO ORDERED.

---

[4] In light of our decision to remand this case for further consideration using the appropriate legal standard, we decline to address the Director's Section 20(a) argument. The Board has consistently held that the Section 20(a) presumption does not apply to the legal issues relating to coverage under the Act. See Stone v. Ingalls Shipbuilding, Inc., 30 BRBS 209 (1996); George v. Lucas Marine Construction, 28 BRBS 230 (1994), aff'd mem., No. 94-70660 (May 30, 1996); Davis v. Doran Co. of Calif., 20 BRBS 121 (1987), aff'd mem., 865 F.2d 1257 (4th Cir. 1989).

/s/ _____
BETTY JEAN HALL, Chief
Administrative Appeals Judge

/s/ _____
ROY P. SMITH
Administrative Appeals Judge

/s/ _____
REGINA C. McGRANERY
Administrative Appeals Judge

APPENDIX E

U.S. Department of Labor

Office of Administrative Law Judges
2600 Mt. Ephraim Avenue
Camden, New Jersey 08104

In the matter of

VINCENT J. RIGGIO

Claimant — Case No. 94-LHC-01948

v. — OWCP No. 02-113391

MAHER TERMINALS, INC.
Employer

Appearances:

Philip J. Rooney, Esq.,
For Claimant

William M. Broderick, Esq. (oral hearing)
Richard P. Stanton, Jr., Esq. (post hearing brief)
For Employer

Before: Ainsworth H. Brown
Administrative Law Judge

DECISION AND ORDER DENYING BENEFITS

This proceeding involves a claim for benefits under the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, as amended, 33 U.S.C. §901, et seq., (the "Act") and the regulations promulgated thereunder. A hearing was held before me in New York, New York on January 16, 1996 at which time the parties were given the opportunity to offer testimony and documentary evidence, and to make oral argument. Upon conclusion of the hearing, the record closed and closing arguments were received in late March and early May.[1]

---

[1] The following references are used herein: TR for Hearing Transcript, EX for Employer's Exhibits, CX for Claimant's Exhibits, and DX for Director's Exhibits

Stipulations

The parties stipulated and, based on the record, I find that:

1. The Claimant sustained an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment on February 3, 1994.
2. There was an employee-employer relationship between the parties.
3. There was proper notice, but no lost time due to the injury.
4. Compensation was paid under state workers compensation law.
5. Sites requirement for coverage under the Act was conceded (33 U.S.C 903).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

The sole factual dispute concerns the status of the Claimant at the time of the injury.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law which follow are based upon my observation of the appearance and demeanor of the witnesses who testified at the hearing and upon my analysis of the entire record, arguments of the parties, and applicable regulations, statutes, and case law. The U.S. Supreme Court has now held that a Longshore Act claim has the burden of persuasion in proving factors of entitlement and can not benefit by the doctrine of true doubt in view of Section 7(c) of the Administrative Procedures Act (Director, OWCP, DOL, v. Greenwich Collieries, and Director, OWCP v. Maher Terminals et al. (___U.S.___, No. 93-744, decided 6/20/94). Additionally, as trier of fact, I may accept or reject all or any part of the evidence, including that of medical witnesses, and rely on my own judgment to resolve factual disputes or conflicts in the evidence. Todd Shipyards v. Donovan, 300 F.2d 741 (5th Cir. 1962).

The Claimant's work activity is as a delivery clerk, a job that involves receiving a delivery order and entering information from it into a computer that generates a document called a TIR. The activity is accomplished in an office. He has occasionally functioned as a checker, an activity that is a traditional "Longshore" job. He has testified that he belonged to the checker's union.

His work for employer concerns with the letter "N" in consideration of his seniority status and job availability. The work that he was assigned to in the office was an assignment he "preferred". He did both clerical receiving and delivery.

He was assigned work outside office in the "lanes". He testified that 50% of the time he was in the lanes about the time of his injury. It is clear from the testimony that the Claimant's recollection of work in the lanes immediately preceding the injury is incorrect and his reference to a 50/50 split of his time may be viewed as suspect as well. It is not an accurate appraisal of his testimony to say that it is "undisputed" as his veracity was directly challenged on cross examination with telling effect and not rehabilitated on redirect.

From studying the cited authorities from the parties, the overriding policy consideration taking into account legislative intent as interpretated by the Benefits Review Board, the 3rd Circuit, and the Supreme Court is to remove the question of coverage from the chance of where one may find oneself , but to concentrate the focus on what one does, to wit, if it is clerical it is not a covered occupation because the "pushing of paper" does not subject one to maritime hazards. Thus, it appears to the undersigned that even if Mr. Riggio had occasional forays into the "lanes", that did not change his preferred status that he had achieved as a clerical worker.

The Claimant questions, possibly rhetorically, why six months' worth of Employer records were not provided in contrast to something like a little less than two weeks worth.

The burden of persuasion; however, is not on the Employer to disprove the element of "status", but, rather, it is upon the Claimant to adduce a preponderance of evidence on the question. If the Claimant believed that six months of records would be relevant then it had the opportunity through discovery to see that those records were available to be placed in the record.

The parties' cite several authorities as instructive in evaluating the disputed issue here. Understandably, the Claimant attempts to distinguish certain precedents that are not supportive of his position (in particular Maher Terminals, Inc. v. Farrell, 548 F.2d 476 (3rd Cir 1977) and Sette v. Maher, 90-LHC-0521 (1971 aff'd BRB No. 91-1920 (1993). The Claimant did not cite or discuss Sealand Service v. Rock, 953 F.2d 56 (3rd Cir 1992) . The Circuit court as noted by the Employer shows that Farrell, and not the favorable decision cited by the Claimant is the controlling law in the 3rd Circuit. The Employer's discussion of the legislative intent is also more insightful than anything offered by the Claimant in furtherance of its point that the intent of the 1984 Amendments was to be restrictive as to coverage questions.

The Claimant has failed in his burden of persuasion to prove that he possess the status of maritime employment so as to come within the purview of coverage under the Act.

ORDER

The claim by Mr. Riggio is DENIED.

/s/ Ainsworth H. Brown
Ainsworth H. Brown
Administrative Law Judge

Dated: May 20, 1996
Camden, New Jersey